

Social Networks contain a lot of data, but also a lot of noise. How can researchers filter out the subcommunities they are interested in, especially in an environment that is constantly changing?

Identifying First Responder Communities Using Social Network Analysis

The Tetherless World Constellation at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute presents a methodology including visualizations for identifying relevant conversation topics and participants.

Working from a use case from the National Institute of Standards and technology, we focus on First Responders.